ETHICS OF LAWYER SOCIAL NETWORKING

Steven C. Bennett*

Social networking via the internet (sometimes called “Web 2.0”) can be a low-cost way to connect with friends, family and old acquaintances, and form new relationships.1 For lawyers, social networking can make business development “faster, better and cheaper.”2 As a result, it has become a topic of interest for many in the legal profession.3 In a 2009 survey conducted by the American Bar Association, forty-three percent of lawyers surveyed said that they are members of at least one online social network (this compared to only fifteen percent in 2008).4 Twelve percent of

---

2 Paul Lippe, Would Henry V Have Used Web 2.0 at Agincourt? Pt. II (Feb. 9, 2009), http://www.law.com/jsp/tal/index.jsp (search “Law.com network” for “Paul Lippe & Henry V”); see also Paul Lippe, The Role Of Social Networking in Law, (July 30, 2009), http://www.law.com/jsp/tal/index.jsp (search “Law.com network” for “Paul Lippe & role of social networking”) (“For my money, social networking will prove to be a powerful tool in law, because its structure reflects the distributed nature of the legal profession, so it has the potential to help improve quality and reduce costs at a time when these are more at the top of clients’ priorities than ever before.”).

3 At its recent annual meeting, the ABA featured a session on “Social Networks, Blawgs and Podcasts: Business Development Tools for the Internet Age.” See Press Release, Am. Bar Ass’n, Ethical Implications of Web 2.0 Technology, Green Marketing, Rainmaking in a Recession Among Law Practice Topics to be Explored at ABA Annual Meeting in Chicago (July 20, 2009), http://www.abanet.org/abanet/media/release/news_release_list.cfm. For a summary of the discussion, see Leora Maccabee, Legal Marketing Ethics in a Web 2.0 World (July 17, 2009), http://lawyerist.com/legal-marketing-ethics-web-2-0/.

respondents reported that their firms are also members of at least one online social network.\textsuperscript{5} Online social networking thus may play an increasing part in the legal community, and will continue to evolve as developers produce new innovations to increase the number and quality of services offered.\textsuperscript{6}

This technology and the frequency of its use has already outpaced established legal practices. Existing ethics guidelines generally do not focus on technology issues, and state bar associations have been slow to fill in the gaps with opinions and best practice guides.\textsuperscript{7} Yet lawyers require at least a basic understanding of how social networking works and some awareness of the ethical implications of using such technologies.\textsuperscript{8} This article briefly addresses some of the ethics issues lawyers may face when they use social networking tools.\textsuperscript{9}

\textsuperscript{5} Id. Another recent survey reported that “nearly 50 percent of lawyers are members of online social networks and more than 40 percent of attorneys believe professional networking has the potential to change the business and practice of law over the next five years.” Kathleen Delaney, Introducing a Blogger Series on Online Networking for Lawyers (Mar. 30, 2009), http://blog.martindale.com/Introducing-a-Blogger-Series-on-Online-Networking-for-Lawyers. More generally, some surveys suggest that in excess of a billion users, world-wide, are connected to one or more social networking sites. See Christian Kreutz, The Next Billion—The Rise of Social Network Sites in Developing Countries (June 19, 2009), http://www.web2fordev.net (search “The Next Billion”).

\textsuperscript{6} The development of “Web 2.0” applications, coupled with the expansion of wi-fi/mobile communications, may mean that the benefits of “Moore’s Law” (regarding expansion of computer power) will continue to yield new services for years to come. See Om Malik, Moore’s Law Reconsidered, BUS. 2.0, Apr. 3, 2007, http://money.cnn.com (search “Om Malik & Moore’s Law”) (“While the PC itself might be disappearing, mobile devices such as the iPhone are the new beneficiaries of Moore’s Law.”).

\textsuperscript{7} The American Bar Association recently announced formation of a “Commission on Ethics 20/20,” with the recognition that [t]echnological advances and globalization have changed our profession in ways not yet reflected in our ethics codes and regulatory structure. Technologies such as e-mail, the Internet and smart phones are transforming the way we practice law and our relationships with clients, just as they have compressed our world and expanded international business opportunities for our clients. See Press Release, Am. Bar. Ass’n, ABA President Carolyn B. Lamm Creates Ethics Commission to Address Technology and Global Practice Challenges Facing U.S. Lawyers (Aug. 4, 2009), http://www.abanet.org/abanet/media/release/news-release-list.cfm (quoting Carolyn B. Lamm, ABA President).

\textsuperscript{8} Micah U. Buchdahl, Facing Facebook and Tweeting with Twitter: GCs Come Up Against Social Networking Sites, Like It or Not, GC MID-ATLANTIC, June 2009, http://www.gcmidatlantic.com/article.php?id=115.

I. WHAT IS SOCIAL NETWORKING?

Social networking Web sites allow registered users to upload profiles, post comments, join “networks,” and add “friends.” They give registered users the opportunity to form “links” between each other, based on friendships, hobbies, personal interests, and business sector or academic affiliations. Social networking sites can be used both personally, to contact friends and find old classmates, and professionally, to look for employment or find someone with whom to collaborate. Most social networking systems are available to all users. Some are available by invitation (or special qualification) only. Most begin with a personal focus on linking “friends,” but many now are used both for business and personal networking purposes. Some directly solicit participation by lawyers.

These sites have received significant media attention. Employers now search social networking sites before hiring employees; consumers worry about protecting themselves from identity theft; and parents seek to keep their children safe from online predators. Advertisers, moreover, increasingly seek ways to exploit social networking systems to entice users into commercial relationships. These kinds of concerns are multiplied when legal professionals use social networking tools.

II. ETHICAL CONSIDERATIONS: A SURVEY

As suggested below, the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct (“Rules”) do not directly address all of the ethics concerns associated with social networking.\(^{18}\) The Rules, however, point to potential issues in a number of areas. The following survey of some of the essential ethical considerations associated with lawyer use of social networking examines the terms of the Rules and reviews some interpretations of the Rules provided by bar ethics opinions, cases, and commentaries.\(^{19}\)

A. Competence, Diligence and Supervision

Rule 1.1 requires that lawyers provide “competent representation to a client.”\(^{20}\) Competent representation requires the “legal knowledge, skill, thoroughness and preparation reasonably necessary for the representation.”\(^{21}\) Because “[a] lawyer may accept representation where the requisite level of competence can be achieved by reasonable preparation,” it is difficult for a lawyer to meet the competency threshold in more technical or complex matters.\(^{22}\) In accordance with these basic principles, lawyers who use social networking tools must at least have a working understanding of the

---

\(^{21}\) Id.

\(^{22}\) See id. at R. 1.1 cmt. 4.
2009] Ethics of Lawyer Social Networking 117

technology.\textsuperscript{23} As the technology is new, and ethics rules and opinions are still developing, lawyers must also keep track of new professional responsibility pronouncements in the area.\textsuperscript{24}

Lawyers cannot “pass the buck” regarding use of these tools. Rule 1.3 requires that lawyers “act with reasonable diligence and promptness in representing a client.”\textsuperscript{25} Further, Rules 5.1 through 5.3 make clear that lawyers must take responsibility to supervise the paraprofessionals and administrative staff that work under their direction.\textsuperscript{26} In short, lawyers and law firms must develop policies and procedures for the use of (or preventing the use of) social networking, and must take affirmative steps to enforce such rules.\textsuperscript{27}

\textbf{B. Confidentiality and Privilege}

Rule 1.6(a) proscribes lawyers revealing information “relating to the representation of a client unless the client gives informed consent, the disclosure is impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation or the disclosure is permitted” under one of several enumerated exceptions.\textsuperscript{28} Comment 16 to Rule 1.6 notes

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{23} See generally Steven C. Bennett, Ethics Guidance Needed, NAT’L L.J., Nov. 25, 2009, at 31.
\item \textsuperscript{24} One excellent source of information on new technologies is the ABA Legal Technology Resource Center. See A.B.A. Legal Technology Resource Center: Homepage, http://www.abanet.org/tech/ltrc (last visited Nov. 13, 2009).
\item \textsuperscript{25} MODEL RULES R. 1.3.
\item \textsuperscript{26} This issue has arisen recently in the context of “outsourcing” of legal services to vendors and part-time professionals. In that context, recent ethics opinions stress that the principal counsel involved in a matter retain ultimate responsibility for supervision of all work. See Steven C. Bennett, The Ethics of Legal Outsourcing, 36 N. KY. L. REV. 479, 482 (2009).
\item \textsuperscript{27} See Doug Cornelius, Online Social Networking: Is It a Productivity Bust or Boon for Law Firms?, LAW PRAC., Mar. 2009, at 28, 29–30, available at www.abanet.org/lpm/magazine/articles/v35/is2/pg28.shtml (stating that misuses of social networking technology “is not a technology problem—it is a people problem”).
\item \textsuperscript{28} MODEL RULES R. 1.6(a). Exceptions to the confidentiality requirement appear in Rule 1.6(b): A lawyer may reveal information relating to the representation of a client to the extent the lawyer reasonably believes necessary: (1) to prevent reasonably certain death or substantial bodily harm; (2) to prevent the client from committing a crime or fraud that is reasonably certain to result in substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another and in furtherance of which the client has used or is using the lawyer’s services; (3) to prevent, mitigate or rectify substantial injury to the financial interests or property of another that is reasonably certain to result or has resulted from the client’s commission of a crime or fraud in furtherance of which the client has used the lawyer’s services; (4) to secure legal advice about the lawyer’s compliance with these Rules; (5) to establish a claim or defense on behalf of the lawyer in a controversy between the lawyer and the client, to establish a defense to a criminal charge or civil claim against the lawyer based upon conduct in which the client was involved, or to respond to allegations in any proceeding concerning the lawyer’s representation of the client; or (6) to comply \end{itemize}
that lawyers “must act competently to safeguard information relating to the representation of a client against inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure by the lawyer or other persons who are participating in the representation of the client or who are subject to the lawyer’s supervision.”29 The lawyer’s duty requires choosing a means of communication for which the lawyer has a reasonable expectation of confidentiality.30 Comment 17 lists factors for determining the reasonableness of a lawyer’s expectation of confidentiality, which include the sensitivity of the information and the extent to which the privacy of the communication is protected by law or by a confidentiality agreement.31

An ABA ethics committee has opined that it is not reasonable to require that a mode of communication, such as email, be avoided simply because interception is technologically possible, especially when unauthorized interception of the information is a violation of law.32 Nonetheless, lawyers “may be required to keep abreast of technological advances in security, as well as the technological advances being developed by hackers who are seeking to steal secrets from third parties.”33 Ultimately, a client may require that the lawyer implement special security measures, for certain confidential communications, in addition to what may be required by the Rules.34

Social networking presents many new ways for lawyers to reveal client information, sometimes inadvertently. Lapses in

---

30 MODEL RULES R. 1.6 cmt. 17; see also Christopher J. Wesser, Ethical Considerations and the Use of Email, FOR THE DEFENSE, Feb. 2007, at 68, 68 (“Model Rule of Professional Conduct 1.16 . . . make[s] clear that [lawyers] have a duty to prevent our confidential communications from being misdirected or otherwise revealed to third-parties.”).
32 J.T. Westermeier, Ethics and the Internet, 17 GEO. J. LEGAL ETHICS 267, 301 (2004).
33 MODEL RULES R. 1.6 cmt. 17; see also Frederick L. Whitmer & Benjamin D. Goldberg, Ethical Issues of the 21st Century (Part One), L. FIRM PARTNERSHIP & BENEFITS REP., Oct. 2008, at 1, 4 (warning that practitioners “should assure themselves about the safeguards present” in their communication systems).
confidentiality can occur on a firm’s Web site and client intake forms, in emails and attachments, on lawyer blogs, bulletin boards, chat rooms, and listservs, and in many other communication forms.\(^{35}\) Simply making a list of contacts public on a networking site, for example, could disclose a confidential relationship.\(^{36}\) Additionally, lawyers may reveal information related to the representation of a client by linking to other Web sites.\(^{37}\) Indeed, some social networking sites require that the user grant the site developer access to all information placed on the site. That arrangement could effectively destroy any claims of privilege or confidentiality regarding social networking communications.\(^{38}\)

The lawyer’s confidentiality protection duty extends to persons providing service to the client at the lawyer’s direction. Thus, commentary to the Rules states: “A lawyer must act competently to safeguard information relating to the representation of a client against inadvertent or unauthorized disclosure by the lawyer or other persons who are participating in the representation of the client or who are subject to the lawyer’s supervision.”\(^{39}\) Lawyers must ensure that paraprofessionals and administrative staff who may use social networking services are made aware of limits on confidentiality associated with such services.

Finally, lawyers may need to discuss means of communications with their clients. Where, for example, a client uses an employer’s computer system to communicate with a lawyer, claims of privilege may be lost because the employee may lack privacy rights in the system.\(^{40}\) Lawyers may need to remind their clients of these and

---

\(^{35}\) See generally Cydney Tune & Marley Degner, Blogging and Social Networking: Current Legal Issues, in INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY LAW INSTITUTE 2009: WEB 2.0 AND THE FUTURE OF MOBILE COMPUTING 113, 130 (2009) (“[C]ourts are generally unwilling to recognize a reasonable expectation of privacy in material that people both willingly post on the Internet and take no steps to limit access to or otherwise protect.”).

\(^{36}\) See Robert F. Chapski, Embracing New Technology and Avoiding Its Pitfalls, FOR THE DEFENSE, Oct. 2008 at 60, 62 (“Conversations among friends are often easily discerned by navigating links to the profile pages of a collection of friends in a social network.”).

\(^{37}\) See Westermeier, supra note 33, at 308.

\(^{38}\) See Thomas R. McLean, EMR Metadata Uses and E-Discovery, 18 ANNALS HEALTH L. 75, 104 (2009) (“After the [social networking] program is installed, any material that passes through the Web site networks may no longer be considered confidential because of the grant of information access that was given to the site owner.”).

\(^{39}\) See MODEL RULES R. 1.6 cmt. 16 (2009).

\section*{C. Creation of Unintended Attorney-Client Relationships}

An attorney-client relationship arises when “a person manifests to a lawyer the person’s intent that the lawyer provide legal services for the person,” and the lawyer either manifests “consent to do so,” or “fails to manifest lack of consent to do so, and the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the person reasonably relies on the lawyer to provide the services.”\footnote{RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 14 (2000).} Under this standard, even if a client never executes an engagement letter, an attorney-client relationship may be implied from the conduct of the parties.\footnote{See, e.g., Togstad v. Vesely, Otto, Miller & Keele, 291 N.W.2d 686, 693 (Minn. 1980) (finding attorney-client relationship sufficient to support malpractice claim established where lawyer told prospective client that she did not have a case and failed to refer her to another attorney); \textit{In re Petrie}, 742 P.2d 796, 800 (Ariz. 1987) (explaining that attorney-client relationship may be implied from conduct of the parties).} Thus, a lawyer who provides casual advice, or solicits confidential information from an acquaintance, risks a claim that an attorney-client relationship has developed.\footnote{James M. McCauley, \textit{Legal Ethics in Cyberspace}, \textit{VA. LAW. REG.}, May 2000, at 10, 11 (2000) (“Even where no fee is paid and no agreement to undertake representation is entered, a lawyer-client relationship will be presumed [as a result of an interaction]. . . . “A lawyer who casually gives legal advice to or obtains confidential information from a friend or acquaintance in a casual, social setting such as a cocktail party may have inadvertently created an attorney-client relationship.”). \textit{But see} Knigge \textit{ex rel. Corvese} v. Corvese, No. 01 CIV 5743(DLC), 2001 WL 830669, at *3 (S.D.N.Y. July 23, 2001) (“A party's 'unilateral belief' that he is represented by counsel 'does not confer upon him the status of client unless there is a reasonable basis for his belief.'” (quoting Catizone v. Wolff, 71 F. Supp. 2d 365, 371 (S.D.N.Y. 1999)).} Rule 1.18, moreover, specifies the duties of a lawyer to a “prospective client,” that is, “[a] person who discusses with a lawyer the possibility of forming a client-lawyer relationship with respect to a matter.”\footnote{MODEL RULES OF PROF'L CONDUCT R. 1.18(a) (2009).} According to the rule, “[e]ven when no client-lawyer relationship ensues, a lawyer who has had discussions with a prospective client shall not use or reveal information learned in the consultation,” except in limited circumstances. Rule 1.18, moreover, advises that a lawyer “shall not represent a client with interests materially adverse to those of a prospective client in the same or a substantially related matter if the lawyer received information from the prospective client that could be significantly harmful” to the prospective client. If a lawyer is disqualified for violating Rule 1.18, no other lawyer in the same firm may conduct the representation, except if both the affected client and the prospective client consent, or if the lawyer who received the information “took reasonable measures to avoid exposure to more disqualifying information than was reasonably necessary to determine whether to represent the prospective client,” and the disqualified lawyer is “timely screened” from the representation, and the prospective client receives prompt written notice.

Comment 2 to Rule 1.18 states that “[a] person who communicates information unilaterally to a lawyer, without any reasonable expectation that the lawyer is willing to discuss the possibility of forming a client-lawyer relationship” should not be considered a “prospective client” within the meaning of the Rule. Further, comment 5 to Rule 1.18 states that “[a] lawyer may condition conversations with a prospective client on the person’s informed consent that no information disclosed during the consultation will prohibit the lawyer from representing a different client in the matter.” In accordance with these rules, commentators suggest that Web sites inviting potential clients to communicate with lawyers should disclaim the existence of an attorney-client relationship, except on express agreement from the lawyer, and caution prospective clients not to send a lawyer confidential information, without confirmation of an agreement to undertake representation.

In the virtual world, the establishment of electronic means of communication with potential clients risks establishment of 46 Id. at R. 1.18(b). Rule 1.6(b) permits revelation of confidential information, for specific, limited purposes. Rule 1.9 applies the same rule to former clients.

---

47 Id. at R. 1.18(c).
48 Id. at R. 1.18(d)(2).
49 Id. at R. 1.18 cmt. 2; see Melissa Blades & Sarah Vermilen, Virtual Ethics for a New Age: The Internet and the Ethical Lawyer, 17 GEO. J. LEGAL ETHICS 637, 647 (2004) (“Because the Model Rules contemplate a discussion between client and lawyer before the attorney-client relationship can attach, unsolicited e-mails with detailed information about the client most likely do not create such a relationship.” (citation omitted)).
50 MODEL RULES R. 1.18 cmt. 5.
51 David Hricik, To Whom it May Concern: Using Disclaimers to Avoid Disqualification by Receipt of Unsolicited E-mail from Prospective Clients, PROF'L LAW., Fall 2005, at 1, 3–4.
attorney-client relationships, if the lawyer does not “exercise caution and vigilance.” The key, in general, is the degree to which the potential client may interact with the lawyer, especially with regard to the exchange of confidential information. Thus, conventional law firm Web sites, which principally provide information about lawyers and their firms, may essentially operate as passive advertising. Yet where such sites invite email contacts with lawyers, the potential for interactions grows. As a result, many firms adopt restrictions on interactions through their Web sites.

The speed of social networking, moreover, may facilitate referrals, advice, and the formation of apparent attorney-client relationships, all with a few clicks of a mouse. In social networking, casual interactions sometimes cannot be distinguished from more formal relationships. Thus, extreme caution must be exercised.

To avoid creating implied attorney-client relationships, lawyers must refrain from giving fact specific legal advice in social interactions. Some jurisdictions have crafted ethics rules

---

52 Ass'n of the Bar of the City of New York, Comm. on Prof'l and Judicial Ethics, Formal Op. 1998-2 (1998), available at http://www.abcny.org/Ethics/eth1998-2.htm; see generally ANTHONY E. DAVIS & DAVID J. ELKANICH, A LAWYER'S GUIDE TO MANAGING E-LAWYERING RISKS 5 (2006), available at http://www.chubb.com/businesses/csi/chubb5904.pdf (“The greatest risk to lawyers and law firms with an Internet presence is that they may not always know who their clients are... [Web site interactions] pose great risks in that attorney-client relationships may be created before any evaluation for appropriateness, such as checking for conflicts of interest, has been completed.”).

54 See Micah Buchdahl, Potential Ethical Issues and Ways to Avoid Pitfalls for the Law Firm Web Site, http://www.internetmarketingattorney.com/archives/000032.htm (search “Potential ethical issues & Micah Buchdahl”) (last visited Nov. 13, 2009). One state ethics opinion, however, suggests that lawyers “cannot avoid” some risk associated with the availability of an email system that allows potential clients to contact a law firm. See Mo. Bar Ass'n, Informal Advisory Op. 20000179 (2000), available at www.mobar.org/mobarforms/opinions/asp (“[A]n attorney can reduce these risks with a disclaimer, but [he or she] cannot avoid them.”).

55 See Filisko, supra note 1, at 50.

56 See Dean R. Dietrich, Online Chat: Be Careful What You Say, WIS. LAW., May 2009, at 21, 22, available at http://www.wisbar.org (search “Dietrich & online”) (“Lawyers should limit their discussion to explaining general principles or trends in the law or laying out the majority and minority viewpoints on particular legal issues. Lawyers... should advise individuals to obtain legal counsel to determine what law would be applicable to their unique circumstances and indicate that the discussion... should not substitute for specific legal advice.”).
Ethics opinions generally distinguish between general and specific legal advice. “Providing legal advice . . . involves offering recommendations tailored to the unique facts of a particular person’s circumstances . . . . [L]awyers wishing to avoid formation of attorney-client relationships through chat room or similar Internet communications should limit themselves to providing legal information.” A lawyer may write on general legal topics (in articles and blog postings) so long as there is no communication of individual advice.

A clear and conspicuous disclaimer of attorney-client relationships can help prevent misunderstandings. Another useful tool is a “click-wrap” disclaimer acknowledgement, which requires readers to manifest their understanding that the communication does not form an attorney-client relationship by clicking “accept” prior to gaining access to Web site contents. Such a disclaimer (or click-wrap acknowledgement) may also clarify that the lawyer does not intend to solicit confidential information from a 59 See id. (“Providing legal information [which is permissible] involves discussion of . . . the kind of information one might give in a speech or newspaper article.”).

---

60 The following is one example of a disclaimer:
No information or materials posted here are intended to constitute legal advice, nor can we guarantee the accuracy of posted information, especially as to each individual situation. LawTek does not independently check the information contained herein and does not refer or endorse any product, service, or firm. This site does not constitute an attorney-client relationship; local counsel should always be consulted.

61 Hricik, supra note 51, at 5. The following is one example of a “click-wrap” acknowledgement:
By clicking “accept” you agree that our review of the information contained in e-mail and any attachments that you submit in a good faith effort to retain us will not preclude any lawyer in our firm from representing a party in any matter where that information is relevant, even if that information is highly confidential and could be used against you, unless that lawyer has actual knowledge of the content of the e-mail. We will otherwise maintain the confidentiality of your information.

Id. at 5–6.
prospective client. For shorter messages, a reference to a Web site with the complete disclaimer may be all that is possible.

In addition to disclaimers and click-wrap acknowledgment forms, lawyers may need to take steps to ensure that they do not accept confidential information from their internet correspondents. Receipt of such information may be one marker of an attorney-client relationship. For example, the Ninth Circuit ruled that an online questionnaire gathering information for potential class members in a class action lawsuit created an attorney-client relationship even though users acknowledged that the questionnaire “[did] not constitute a request for legal advice and that [the user was] not forming an attorney client relationship by submitting this information.”

D. Conflicts

The inadvertent creation of attorney-client relationships sometimes creates conflicts for an entire firm. Under Rule 1.7, a lawyer generally cannot represent a client if the representation involves a conflict of interest. Conflicts rules are more complicated than this simple principle suggests. Under the Rules, for example, a lawyer may represent a client, despite a potential conflict, where the lawyer believes that competent representation is possible, the representation is not prohibited by law, the representation does not involve “assertion of a claim by one client against another client,” and each affected client gives informed consent. The representation, however, must not involve the “assertion of a claim by one client against another client.” The conflicts of one lawyer in a law firm, moreover, may be attributed to

---

62 See Nicole Lindquist, Ethical Duties to Prospective Clients Who Send Unsolicited Emails, SHIDLER J. L. COMMERCE & TECH., Fall 2008, at 8, available at http://www.lctjournal.washington.edu/Vol5/a08Lindquist.html (“Online disclaimers present a unique challenge because viewers can easily ignore, skip or misunderstand them. . . . (D)isclaimers should require some sort of assent.”).

64 Barton v. U.S. Dist. Court, 410 F.3d 1104, 1107 (9th Cir. 2005) (citation omitted).

65 Where a conflict is apparent from the outset of an encounter with a prospective client, the lawyer must decline the representation. See MODEL RULES OF PROF’L CONDUCT R. 1.7 cmt. 3 (2009). (“A conflict of interest may exist before representation is undertaken, in which event the representation must be declined, unless the lawyer obtains the informed consent of each client . . . .”).

66 See id. at R. 1.7(b)(1)–(4).

67 See id. at R. 1.7(b)(3).
other lawyers in the firm. Due to these kinds of complexities, most U.S. law firms have rigorous systems of “conflict clearance” before any legal engagement is accepted. Failure to follow these conflict clearance systems, in the context of social networking communications that may be characterized as forming relationships with clients, could cause considerable difficulty for a lawyer.

Under Rule 1.7, moreover, conflicts may arise where representation of a client may be “materially limited” by a “personal interest of the lawyer.” Thus, in theory, if a lawyer were to take a definitive legal position, in a blog or other posting, such position could “materially limit” the lawyer’s ability to represent clients for whom the opposite legal position is dominant. Yet, the notion of positional inconsistency does not prevent a lawyer from taking “antagonistic positions on a legal question” that arises in different cases. Indeed, some ethics opinions suggest that a lawyer may take “antagonistic positions on a legal question” that arises in different cases. Further, even where an 68 See id. at R. 1.10(a) (“While lawyers are associated in a firm, none of them shall knowingly represent a client when any one of them practicing alone would be prohibited from doing so.”). The precise application of this rule is a matter of some subtlety. Law firms may, for example, build “Chinese Walls,” to avoid potential conflicts due to imputed knowledge of the affairs of two clients in potential conflict. See Robert E. Ware, The Conflict Virus: When Are Lawyer Conflicts Imputed to the Firm?, CLEVELAND B. J., Jan. 2005, at 16–17 (outlining requirements for an “ethical screen” or “Chinese Wall”).

---

69 See MODEL RULES R. 1.7 cmnt. 3 (“To determine whether a conflict of interest exists, a lawyer should adopt reasonable procedures, appropriate for the size and type of firm and practice, to determine in both litigation and non-litigation matters the persons and issues involved.”). The effectiveness of even sophisticated conflict clearance systems has been questioned by some commentators. See SUSAN P. SHAPIRO, TANGLED LOYALTIES: CONFLICT OF INTEREST ON LEGAL PRACTICE 198 (2002) (suggesting that lawyers may develop conflicts in subtle ways, including social relationships).

70 MODEL RULES R. 1.7(a)(2).

71 See WILLIAM FREIVOGEL, LEGAL ETHICS AND TECHNOLOGY 1 (2002), http://www.abanet.org/buslaw/newsletter/0002/materials/oops.pdf (“Taking positions on legal issues online could undermine the position a lawyer is taking, or may have to take, on behalf of a client.”).

72 See Noreen L. Slank, Positional Conflicts: Is It Ethical To Simultaneously Represent Clients with Opposing Legal Positions?, MICH. B. J., May 2002, at 15, 15 available at http://www.michbar.org/journal/pdf/pdf4article427.pdf (“[Positional conflicts] have generally been tolerated except under the most sensitive of ethical barometers. . . . [Lawyers] can speak with as many voices as there are clients with positions to advance.”).

73 See Prof’l Ethics Comm. of the Maine Bd. of Overseers of the Bar, Op. 155 (1997), available at http://www.mebaroverseers.org/Ethics%20Opinions/Opinion%2055.htm (explaining that an “issue conflict . . . is not a conflict of interest,” but noting the duty of a lawyer to employ “best judgment” to ensure that advocacy in a different case will not “impair her effectiveness”); D.C. Bar Legal Ethics Comm., Op. 265 (1996), available at http://www.dcbar.org/for_lawyers/ethics/legal_ethics/opinions/opinion265.cfm (“A traditional notion in the law of legal ethics holds that there is nothing unseemly about a lawyer’s taking directly opposing views in different cases so long as the lawyer does not do so simultaneously.” For example, a prosecutor may become a criminal defense lawyer after public service; a lawyer for plaintiff may represent defendants in other cases).
individual lawyer might be prohibited from taking such antagonistic positions, other lawyers in the firm may not be so precluded.74

At a minimum, however, public statements of a definitive legal position adverse to an existing client may cause embarrassment for a lawyer, or a law firm.75 Even if lawyers do not entirely eschew social networking for fear of causing such problems, some form of restraint may be appropriate.76 Some law firms, for example, require screening by a committee of all publications. Moreover, often firms require that individual publications be labeled as representing the opinion of the individual author only, such that the opinion should not be attributed to the firm or its clients.

E. Unauthorized Practice of Law

Generally, under Rule 5.5, a lawyer who is not admitted to practice in a jurisdiction must not “establish an office or other systematic and continuous presence” in the jurisdiction for the practice of law; or “hold out to the public or otherwise represent that the lawyer is admitted to practice law in [that] jurisdiction.”77 A non-lawyer who falsely offers legal services under the guise of being a lawyer is guilty of the unauthorized practice of law. And, because licensing of the practice of law is a state matter, a lawyer authorized to practice law in one state cannot, without admission to the other state’s bar, or pro hac vice admission for purposes of a specific matter, perform unlicensed legal services in a foreign 74 In its Formal Opinion 2007-177, the Oregon Bar noted that there is “no way for everyone in a multilawyer firm to know every current or potential issue that may arise in every case the firm is handling.” Further, “there is no safeguard that a lawyer or firm can reasonably take to avoid issue conflicts in the same manner that a lawyer or firm can avoid traditional conflicts by keeping lists of the names of current and former clients.” The Rules, moreover, “are intended [to] [sic] be construed in a practicable manner that does not create unavoidable traps.” In light of these concerns, the opinion concluded, “it would be inappropriate to hold that on pain of discipline, all lawyers at a firm are chargeable with the full ‘issue conflict’ knowledge of every other lawyer at the firm.” Rather, “[a]ctual knowledge, or at least negligence in not knowing, [about the positional conflict] must first be proved.” Or. State Bar, Formal Ethics Op. 2007-177 (2007), available at http://www.osbar.org/_docs/ethics/ethics/2007-177.pdf.

---

77 MODEL RULES OF PROF’L CONDUCT R. 5.5(b)(1)–(2) (2009).
The precise contours of these rules are somewhat ill-defined. Increasingly, moreover, lawyers need to operate in more than one state (and perhaps more than one country) to be effective. In 2002, to address this issue, the ABA expanded its rules on multi-disciplinary practice to permit limited forms of multi-jurisdictional practice.

Rule 8.5 provides, however, that a lawyer not admitted in a particular jurisdiction is subject to disciplinary authority in that jurisdiction, “if the lawyer provides or offers to provide any legal services in [that] jurisdiction.” Comment 5 to Rule 8.5 states that a lawyer’s conduct must “conform[] to the rules of [the] jurisdiction in which the lawyer reasonably believes the predominant effect [of the lawyer’s conduct] will occur.”

A lawyer may use disclaimers to reduce problems involving unauthorized practice of law. The language of the disclaimer should indicate the state (or states) in which the attorney is admitted.

Because a lawyer may not “establish an office or other systematic and continuous presence” in a jurisdiction in which the lawyer is not admitted, maintaining a blog or social networking profile may expose lawyers to unauthorized practice rules in many jurisdictions. One commentator has noted that, where a law firm “maintains an interactive website and purposefully avails itself of a jurisdiction, it is reasonable to conclude that the law firm will be subject to the ethical rules applicable in such jurisdiction.”

Although courts have not found that operating a Web site alone constitutes the practice of law, some courts have held that maintaining an online presence can contribute to liability. A Maine ethics opinion provides that a lawyer who is not licensed to practice in Maine, but has an office in Maine and maintains a Web site holding himself out as able to provide legal services in Maine, engages in the unauthorized practice of law. In California, a court held that, although not physically present, an out-of-state lawyer’s use of “telephone, fax, computer, or other modern technological means” could constitute unauthorized practice of law. Although the court declined to rule that a lawyer’s virtual presence in California automatically amounted to practicing law, the holding is a reminder that courts pay attention to an online presence. A prudent lawyer should research jurisdictional restrictions on cross-border practice before creating Web sites or profiles on the Internet.

to practice, on either a temporary or continuous basis, in another jurisdiction if the lawyer is providing legal services solely for the lawyer’s employer or its affiliates, or is engaging in activities authorized by federal or other law. Id. at R. 5.5(d).

Westermeier, supra note 33, at 288.

For a discussion of recent decisions, see id. at 284–88.

Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank, P.C. v. Superior Court, 949 P.2d 1, 6 (Cal. 1998).

Id.; see also Florida Bar v. Kaiser, 397 So.2d 1132, 1133 (Fla. 1981) (finding a New York lawyer engaged in unauthorized practice of law when he advertised his law firm in Miami telephone books and on television, creating the impression that lawyer was licensed to practice in Florida).

F. Advertising

In Bates v. State Bar of Arizona,\textsuperscript{93} the Supreme Court ruled that to preserve the “free flow” of commercial information, states cannot wholly ban lawyer advertising, but can regulate false, deceptive, or misleading advertisements.\textsuperscript{94} The Court in Bates noted the possibility that lawyer advertising might not provide a consumer with all of the relevant information needed to make an informed decision about counsel. Nevertheless, the Court observed, “[t]he alternative—the prohibition of advertising—serves only to restrict the information that flows to consumers.”\textsuperscript{95} Consistent with that ruling, Rule 7.2 permits a lawyer to advertise services through written, recorded, or electronic communications, “including public media.”\textsuperscript{96} Comment 2 to Rule 7.2 provides that the rule permits public dissemination of information concerning a lawyer’s name or firm name, address and telephone number; the kinds of services the lawyer will undertake; the basis on which the lawyer’s fees are determined, including prices for specific services and payment and credit arrangements; a lawyer’s foreign language ability; names of references and, with their consent, names of clients regularly represented; and other information that might invite the attention of those seeking legal assistance.\textsuperscript{97}

Various states, applying these general rules, have prepared more detailed guidelines for appropriate attorney advertising.\textsuperscript{98} Several states’ ethics opinions, moreover, have attempted to apply these guidelines to specific aspects of lawyering in cyberspace.\textsuperscript{99} The \textsuperscript{93} 433 U.S. 350 (1977).

\textsuperscript{94} Id. at 383–84. Beyond “commercial speech,” lawyers also have rights to express their beliefs or participate in political discourse. Distinguishing between such forms of speech may be difficult, in the context of social networking. See Will Hornaby, Lawyers Shouldn’t Have To Guess on Ethics of Online Marketing, MICH. LAW. WKLY., Aug. 18, 2008, available at 2008 WLNR 25703029 (noting that regulation in this area amounts to “uncharted territory”).

\textsuperscript{95} Id. at 374.

\textsuperscript{96} See MODEL RULES OF PROF’L CONDUCT R. 7.2(a) & cmt. 3 (2009). (“E]lectronic media, such as the Internet, can be an important source of information about legal services, and lawful communication by electronic mail is permitted by this Rule.”).

\textsuperscript{97} Id. at R. 7.2 cmt. 2.

guidelines do not, however, deal specifically with social networking as a means of advertisement. Nevertheless, certain essential principles appear in the guidelines and related opinions.

Law firm Web sites may be labeled a form of advertising. In general, lawyers may use Web sites and blogs to advertise their services. They may also use profiles on social networking sites. Such communications over the internet may be subject to state regulations on advertising.

Comment 3 to Rule 7.2, however, recognizes that “electronic media, such as the Internet, can be an important source of information about legal services.” MODEL RULES R. 7.2 cmt. 3.

See Susan Corts Hill, Living in a Virtual World: Ethical Considerations for Attorneys Recruiting New Clients in Online Virtual Communities, 21 GEO. J. LEGAL ETHICS 733, 737 n.21 (2008) (“[L]aw firm and lawyer websites are widely considered to be a form of advertising.” (citation omitted)); J.T. Westermeier, Ethical Issues for Lawyers on the Internet and World Wide Web, 6 RICH. J.L. & TECH. 5 (1999) (“Many jurisdictions have determined that the advertising rules adopted by local bar associations apply to websites.”).

Frederick L. Whitmer & Benjamin D. Goldberg, Ethical Issues of the 21st Century (Part Two), L. FIRM PARTNERSHIP & BENEFITS REP., Nov. 2008, at 3, 3. Lawyers also may advertise via the Internet, provided the advertisements comply with ethics rules. See supra notes 98–100 and accompanying text.

Whitmer & Goldberg, supra note 102, at 8 (“[T]he prudent approach is to conclude that the [advertising] rule applies to social network sites and blogs because much of the same information is often included on both. Indeed, it would appear imprudent to conclude otherwise.”).

Some commentators suggest that the advertising rules “presumptively” govern lawyer communications on blogs and social networking sites. See Sarah Hale, Lawyers at the Keyboard: Is Blogging Advertising and If So, How Should It Be Regulated?, 20 GEO. J. LEGAL ETHICS 669, 671 (2007) (“[Rule 7.2] was intended to cover any ‘new public-communication
Some states require submission of all attorney advertisements to a state bar committee for approval. Yet because social networking profiles and posts can be (and often are) updated daily, materials submitted may not reflect current content. At the very least, lawyers should keep periodic records, such as hard copies of Web site “screen shots,” in case state regulators ask to review their advertising.

Lawyers must also take care regarding the types of information they post on Web sites and social networking sites. Testimonials about a lawyer’s accomplishments may be prohibited, absent an express disclaimer. Excessive testimonials from “friends,” moreover, could in some instances create “unjustified expectations” about the outcome a lawyer can obtain for other clients.

G. Solicitation

Rule 7.3 provides that “[a] lawyer shall not by in-person, live telephone or real-time electronic contact solicit professional employment from a prospective client when a significant motive for the lawyer’s doing so is the lawyer’s pecuniary gain.” Under Rule 7.3, a lawyer may not solicit professional employment unless the person contacted is a lawyer or has a familial, personal, or prior

---

105 See Charles F. Luce Jr., Ethics in Attorney Advertising & Solicitation (1997), http://www.mgovg.com/ethics/11 advert.htm (“The conservative approach is for those lawyers licensed in more than one state to follow the advertising rules of the most restrictive state in which they are licensed.”).

106 See C.C. Holland, Mind the Ethics of Online Networking (Nov. 6, 2007), http://www.law.com/jsp/legaltechnology/pubArticleLT.jsp?id=1194257030032 (explaining that pre-approval of content may be “just about impossible” where social networking materials “can reflect daily or even real-time changes that are outside the user’s control”).

107 Arizona requires attorneys to retain copies of Web sites when they appear in a retrievable format. Massachusetts requires attorneys to keep copies of the content of Web sites for two years. New York and Virginia require attorneys to keep a copy of the Web site for at least one year. North Carolina requires copies of the Web pages to be retained for two years along with notations of when the pages were used. For a list of state requirements, see Am. Bar Ass’n, Legal Ethics and Technology: Advertising and Solicitation: States, http://www.abanet.org/lpm/magazine/articles/v35/is1/pg37.html [hereinafter Advertising and Solicitation] (last visited Nov. 13, 2009).

108 See Holland, supra note 106.

110 MODEL RULES OF PROF’L CONDUCT R. 7.3(a) (2009); see RONALD D. ROTUNDA & JOHN S. DZIEKOWSKI, LEGAL ETHICS: THE LAWYER’S DESKBOOK ON PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY § 7.3–1, at 1146 (2009) (explaining the background and purpose of the solicitation ban).
professional relationship with the lawyer. Further, a lawyer may not solicit employment from a prospective client by electronic communication if “the prospective client has made known to the lawyer a desire not to be solicited by the lawyer; or the solicitation involves coercion, duress or harassment.” Comment 1 to the Rule notes the “potential for abuse” in such solicitations.

The question becomes whether social networking communications constitute “real-time electronic contact[s]” or merely “general advertising,” the latter of which is not prohibited as solicitation. At one end of the spectrum, passive Web sites and non-interactive blogs, although perhaps advertising, generally do not constitute prohibited solicitation. At the other end, “chat room” communications, wherein lawyers may importune potential clients to hire them, just as they might through a telephone call or in person, generally are considered to be solicitations. Although a

111 MODEL RULES R. 7.3(a).
112 Id. at R. 7.3(b).
113 See id. at R. 7.3 cmt. 1 (“The prospective client, who may already feel overwhelmed by the circumstances giving rise to the need for legal services, may find it difficult fully to evaluate all available alternatives with reasoned judgment and appropriate self-interest in the face of the lawyer's presence and insistence upon being retained immediately. The situation is fraught with the possibility of undue influence, intimidation, and over-reaching.”).
114 See MODEL RULES R. 7.3(a) cmt. 3 (“The use of general advertising and written, recorded or electronic communications to transmit information from lawyer to prospective client, rather than direct in-person, live telephone or real-time electronic contact, will help to assure that the information flows cleanly as well as freely. The contents of advertisements and communications permitted under Rule 7.2 can be permanently recorded so that they cannot be disputed and may be shared with others who know the lawyer. This potential for informal review is itself likely to help guard against statements and claims that might constitute false and misleading communications, in violation of Rule 7.1. The contents of direct in-person, live telephone or real-time electronic conversations between a lawyer and a prospective client can be disputed and may not be subject to third-party scrutiny. Consequently, they are much more likely to approach (and occasionally cross) the dividing line between accurate representations and those that are false and misleading.”).
chat room discussion “provides less opportunity for an attorney to pressure or coerce a potential client than do telephone or in-person solicitations, real-time communication is potentially more immediate, more intrusive and more persuasive than e-mail or other forms of writing.”

The degree of “interactivity and immediacy” of social networking tools can vary greatly. For example, a lawyer who posts a profile on a social networking site identifying the individual as a lawyer probably does not invoke the interactivity and immediacy of a solicitation, although such a posting may be considered an advertisement. The Twitter system (and its many clones), by contrast, essentially amounts to broadcast e-mails, to recipients who agree to “follow” a particular Twitter broadcaster. The choice to follow a particular “friend” is the user’s alone, although often threads of conversations with other “friends of friends” can produce new connections. The messages, moreover, are extremely short, and do not typically invite an immediate response.

Other forms of social networking are designed to deepen relationships with family, friends, and acquaintances, through shared interactions. A profile (or “wall”) on a social networking Web site, for example, typically offers participants the opportunity to post photographs and comments surrounding a shared interest.

[119] See Holland, supra note 106; see Margaret Hensler Nicholls, A Quagmire of Internet Ethics Law and the ABA Guidelines for Legal Website Providers, 18 GEO. J. LEGAL ETHICS 1021, 1028 (2005).

[120] See Bennett, supra note 63, at 11.

[122] See id. ("The experience of using Twitter has been described as walking into a room of conversations and looking for a ‘hook’ to decide if and when to jump in.").

[123] See NEVER ENDING FriENDING: A JOURNEY INTO SOCIAL NETWORKING 17 (2007), http://creative.myspacecdn.com/Client/MySpace/Sales/pdf/NeverEndingFriending.pdf ("Most social networking users rely on the medium to deepen their existing relationships, whether with their favorite bands, brands, or people.").

Users may connect to specific groups, already formed within the social network, and generally interact freely after admission to the group. The immediacy of the interactions, however, depends on the individual users.

The degree to which users may already have “personal” relationships, as defined in Rule 7.3, may vary greatly. A “friend of a friend” or a stranger encountered in a networking user group probably could not qualify as a “personal” relationship sufficient to permit a solicitation. But many other social networking users connect precisely because they already have long-standing relationships. With such relationships, solicitation or referrals may be entirely appropriate and appreciated.

Thus, a flat prohibition or approval of any particular type of social networking solicitation may not be feasible. Rule 7.3 requires that any “electronic communication from a lawyer soliciting professional employment from a prospective client known to be in need of legal services . . . shall include the words

---

125 Id. ("[The public commenting feature] allows individuals to comment on their Friends' profiles. These comments are displayed prominently and visible for anyone who has access to that profile."); Monica S. Flores, 20 Tips for Social Networking Using Facebook (Apr. 3, 2009), http://www.womensmedia.com/work/106-20-tipes-for-social-neworking-using-facebook.pdf ("A group [on a social networking site] is just like a group in real life—a gathering of people interested in a particular idea, issue, or cause. . . . [There are] thousands of different groups that have been set up for different interests.").

126 See Educause Learning Initiative, supra note 121. One set of California commentators suggests that “[t]o the extent a lawyer makes contact with a prospective client on a social networking site, the advertising and solicitation rules would almost certainly apply.” PAUL W. VAPNEK ET. AL., CALIFORNIA PRACTICE GUIDE: PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY ¶ 2:539 (2008), available at WL CAPROFR CH 2-G. The question of “Internet communications and ‘in person’ solicitation,” however, is under review in California. See id. ¶ 2:592.5.

127 See MODEL RULES OF PROF'L CONDUCT R. 7.3(a) (2009).

128 See Martin A. Cole, Friends and Family, BENCH & B. MINN., Feb. 2007, at 12, 13, available at WL 64-FEB BBMN 12 ("Individuals who have such a relationship with the lawyer may well turn to the attorney naturally to handle their legal affairs. Thus, the need for time to reflect or seek independent advice does not seem as essential in this situation.").

129 Broadcasting of “spam” solicitations to multiple users may produce disciplinary sanctions, no matter the lack of immediacy and interactivity of the medium. See Tenn. Bar Ass'n, Actions from the Board of Professional Responsibility, TENN. B. J., July–Aug. 1997, http://tba2.org/Journal_TBArchives/jul97/tbj-jul97-news7.html ("[A lawyer was disbarred for, among other things, placing] an advertisement that appeared on more than 5,000 Internet[] news groups and 10,000 e-mail lists. . . . The hearing panel found that the posting . . . was an improper intrusion into the recipients' privacy."); Utah State Bar Ethics Advisory Opinion Comm., Op. 02-02 (2002), available at http://www.utahbar.org/rules_ops_pols/ethics_opinions/op_02_02.html (explaining that emails that encourage recipient to engage firm’s services and extol firm’s expertise are “solicitations” for purposes of ethics rules); see also Matthew T. Rollins, Examination of the Model Rules of Professional Conduct Pertaining to the Marketing of Legal Services in Cyberspace, 22 J. MARSHALL J. COMPUTER & INFO. L. 113, 128–29 (2003) (discussing application of spam rules to lawyer advertising).
‘Advertising Material’ . . . at the beginning and ending of any . . .
electronic communication, unless the recipient of the communication” is a lawyer or has a prior relationship with the lawyer.130 Solicitations on Web sites, blogs, and social networking sites must be clearly marked in accordance with this requirement.131

H. Honesty in Communications

Rule 7.1 prohibits lawyers from making “a false or misleading communication about the lawyer or the lawyer’s services.”132 Under the Rule, “[a] communication is false or misleading if it contains a material misrepresentation of fact or law, or omits a fact necessary to make the statement considered as a whole not materially misleading.”133 A lawyer’s Web site, blog, or social networking profile necessarily concerns the lawyer and his or her services, and such informational platforms must be true and not misleading.134
For example, a law firm cannot imply, by using the word “bar” in its domain name, that it is associated with a bar organization; nor may it use “org” as a top level suffix, which might imply that it is a not-for-profit organization.135

Professional qualifications listed on social networking sites should correspond to official records and descriptions on firm Web sites.136 Lawyers not yet admitted to a state bar should so note in their user profiles and other materials on social networking sites.

Rule 8.4, more generally, prohibits lawyers from engaging in any 130 MODEL RULES R. 7.3(c).

131 For a list of state requirements, see Advertising and Soliciting, supra note 107.
132 MODEL RULES R. 7.1.
133 Id.
134 Tune & Degner, supra note 35, at 132.
http://www.myazbar.org/Ethics/opinionview.cfm?id=273; see also Ass’n of the Bar of the City http://www.nycbar.org/Ethics/eth2003-1.htm (explaining that domain names may not imply expected results, such as “bigverdict.com” or include “puffery,” such as http://www.ncbar.gov/ethics/index.asp (explaining that domain name need not specifically identify law firm, so long as name is not otherwise misleading); The Supreme Court of Ohio, Board of Comm’rs on Grievances and Discipline, Advisory Op. 99-4 (1999), available at http://www.supremecourt.ohio.gov/Boards/BOC/Advisory_Opinions/display.asp (explaining that it is “preferable” for a law firm to use its name as a domain name on its Web site, but other names may be used, so long as they are not deceptive).
136 See MODEL RULES R. 7.4(a). A lawyer may also list areas of specialty. Rule 7.4(a) allows a lawyer to “communicate the fact that the lawyer does or does not practice in particular fields of law.” Id.
conduct that involves any “dishonesty, fraud, deceit or misrepresentation.” Applying that Rule, a Philadelphia bar ethics committee held that a lawyer could not use a third party to “friend” an adverse witness, in an attempt to find evidence to impeach the witness, on a social networking site. The committee concluded that such communication was “deceptive” because it omitted the material connection between the third party and the lawyer and the intent to gain information for purposes of litigation.

Finally, under Rule 3.6(a), trial lawyers cannot “make extrajudicial statements that . . . will be disseminated by means of public communication,” where such communications may “have a substantial likelihood of materially prejudicing” a legal proceeding. Attorneys who blog about ongoing litigation might, therefore, be subject to professional discipline.

III. CONCLUSION

In 2003, the American Bar Association’s Law Practice Management “eLawyering Task Force” created a set of “Best Practice Guidelines For Legal Information Web Site Providers.” The Guidelines, among other things, suggested that Web sites should:

- provide full and accurate information on the identity and contact details of the provider of the site.
- include information about the dates on which the substantive content on [the site] was prepared or last reviewed.
- avoid misleading users about the jurisdiction

---

137 Id. at R. 8.4.
139 Id. Some commentators, however, suggest that such “deception” may be justified, in circumstances where essential evidence otherwise would not become available. See Monroe H. Freedman, In Praise of Overzealous Representation—Lying to Judges, Deceiving Third Parties, and Other Ethical Conduct, 34 Hofstra L. Rev. 771, 780–81 (2006); see also Elizabeth Stull, Ethics Evolving with Technology, DAILY REC. (Rochester, N.Y.), May 14, 2009, available at 2009 WLNR 9278552 (noting that some ethics opinions permit “dissemblance” when there is an “overarching public issue being pursued,” such as “housing discrimination”).
140 MODEL RULES R. 3.6.
141 See Richard Raysman & Peter Brown, The Effects of Blogging on Legal Proceedings, N.Y. L.J., May 12, 2009, at 3, 3 (noting a case where the court reprimanded a prosecutor for blogging about ongoing trial).
to which the site’s content relates. . . . [And] give users conspicuous notice that legal information does not constitute legal advice.\textsuperscript{143}

Today, just a few years later, these general ABA Guidelines remain apt. But the constant addition of social networking tools to the array of communications methods that lawyers use every day has already made these guidelines incomplete. With these new networking tools, the practice of law is changing, and rapidly.\textsuperscript{144}

Social networking requires concerted thinking about adaptation of legal ethics rules to a dynamic world, where interactions between attorneys, clients, and communities of social network users can become quite complicated. In this dynamic environment, the best approach for the responsible lawyer is to become educated on new technologies and new methods of practice, to remain alert to potential ethical issues involved in the use of these technologies and methods of practice, and to encourage candid discussion among lawyers, clients, IT specialists, and law firm managers about the best means both to serve client interests and to uphold the high standards of the profession.\textsuperscript{145}

\textsuperscript{143} Id.

\textsuperscript{144} See Nicole L. Black, Five Responses To Technology, DAILY REC. (Rochester, N.Y.), Aug. 10, 2009, \textit{available at} 2009 WLNR 15575757 (explaining that most of the legal profession is “stuck in the middle of the process” of adjusting to technological developments); Steven C. Bennett, Teaching Technology Skills To Lawyers, NAT’L L. J., Jan. 20, 2006, \textit{available at} http://www.law.com/jsp/article.jsp?id=1137665109054 (outlining the need for technology training).

\textsuperscript{145} This Article has not addressed the separate technical and legal questions that may surround privacy, data security, virus protection and other concerns associated with electronic communications used in the practice of law. \textit{See generally} Faith M. Heikkila, Data Privacy in the Law Firm: How to Protect Client Data, MICH. B. J., July 2009, at 33, \textit{available at} www.michbar.org/journal/pdf/pdf4article1535.pdf; Justin Rebello, Protecting Your Law Firm’s Online Data, WIS. L. J., Aug. 24, 2009, http://www.wislawjournal.com/article.cfm/2009/08/24/Protecting-your-law-firms-online-data. These kinds of concerns certainly should be accounted for in a law firm’s policies and procedures. Furthermore, stressing common sense in social networking, such as pointing out that everyone should avoid making defamatory communications, is vital in training lawyers and staff. \textit{See, e.g.}, Posting of Adrianos Facchetti to Twitip, http://www.twitip.com/10-ways-to-avoid-being-sued-on-twitter/ (Aug. 21, 2009) (advising, among other things, to “lay off the booze” when communicating on social networks). Finally, social networking information may be discoverable, in the event of litigation. \textit{See Ledbetter v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.}, No. 06-cv-01958, 2009 WL 1067018, at *1 (D. Colo. Apr. 21, 2009) (ordering production of Web site information in response to subpoenas).