

A CALL FOR SUBMISSIONS

The Albany Law Review is soliciting article submissions for publication in its annual State Constitutional Commentary volume. Selected articles will be published in the fourth issue of volume seventy-three, scheduled for publication in May 2010.

The Law Review reserves one issue annually for the publication of articles and lectures on contemporary issues of state constitutional law. The annual Lawrence H. Cooke State Constitutional Commentary Symposium is a complement to this volume. This year's symposium, entitled Wrongful Convictions: Understanding and Addressing Criminal Injustice, is a timely event that recognizes Chief Judge Jonathan Lippman's recent appointment of a permanent New York State task force on wrongful convictions. The symposium will feature several distinguished speakers on the topic, including the newly elected Manhattan District Attorney, Cyrus Vance, Jr. Articles by legal scholars, professionals, and law or graduate students are now being sought on related subject matter.

About the Albany Law Review: Founded more than seventy years ago, the Albany Law Review is an independent, student-run organization, housed at Albany Law School. The Law Review is committed to making meaningful contributions to the law and legal scholarship through the publication of critical and analytical articles. To date, the Law Review has produced 72 volumes of legal scholarship written by judges, lawyers, law school professors, as well as notes and comments on legal topics written by members and other students. More information can be found on our Web site, www.albanylawreview.org.

Editorial Philosophy: Through editing, Albany Law Review seeks to ensure the substantive and grammatical correctness of every line published. We will never attempt to alter the "voice" of a piece or its author. Any and all editorial changes made by Law Review staff will be finally agreed upon by the author prior to publication.
